Porter’s Forces

Threat of New Entrants – Low to Moderate	- Easy to start: new nonprofits or memorial funds need little capital or approval - Hard to copy founder: Izhar Shay, ex-Science Minister whose son fell on Oct. 7 - Hard to copy backing: Pres. Herzog, Google, Amazon, Cisco, Meta, LeumiTech, Deloitte
Threat of Substitutes – High	- Other causes: donors can give to OneFamily, JNF-USA, or rebuilding southern Israel - Direct investing: backers can fund startups via OurCrowd, iAngels, or VCs - Traditional memorials: scholarships, tree dedications, and named funds
Bargaining Power of Suppliers – Moderate	- Volunteer reliance: ~50 volunteers, many with full-time jobs, risk burnout and turnover - Partners can switch: e.g., Google runs its own $4M fund for Israeli AI startups - Family leverage: bereaved families can withdraw consent; the brand depends on their trust
Bargaining Power of Funders – High	- Foundations: Schusterman, Jim Joseph, etc. choose among many Israel-focused applicants - The organizations seeking money are competing for funding, so they have to adapt to what different funders require.
Competitive Rivalry – High	- Relief donors: JFNA Israel Emergency Campaign, FIDF, AFMDA - Startup support: Iron Nation ($20M wartime fund), Meta AI Accelerator TLV, 8200 EISP - Edge: only player pairing memorials to the fallen with startup building

Competitive Analysis

Competition:

MassChallenge Israel:	A zero cost/equity accelerator offering structured workshops and mentorship to investors and corporate partners.
Iron Nation:	An investment fund backing Israeli startups across various sectors

Key Differentiator:

- Next October connects startup growth with individual remembrance, giving supporters both an economic and personal reason to contribute

Main Challenge:

- Standing out among established startup support organizations by showing how Next October's unique mission translates into meaningful and measurable impact.
